

as if somehow planned

with arms raised high
she stands
against a fading sky

a semi-circle
from hand
through arm, to neck,
through arm to hand

between her fingertips
as if somehow planned
she holds a single cloud
as white as snow
that frames a heron
in majestic flight
across a watery land

for a moment

before the time of day
runs out like sand